

Who did Sprint call to help grow its customer base?

Sprint helped revolutionize the wireless industry as the first national carrier to market a 4G network. But being a global leader in mobile technology does not make you immune from the common struggle marketers face—growing and retaining their customer base. Even for Sprint, globalization and localization make it difficult to drive messages and capture attention while preserving the brand, protecting the message and distributing relevant communications.

Situation

“Marketing gone wild” is how Mark Rexroat, Director of Retail Communications and Marketing Services for Sprint, used to describe the Sprint sales environment. With thousands of retail stores and independent providers, Sprint often struggled to prevent individual and retail sales associates from modifying existing content or creating new marketing materials altogether. These non-brand compliant materials would be shared with customers and peers, resulting in inaccurate information going viral. Sprint also faces tightening legal and regulatory requirements, operating budgets and other resources, adding to the need for better marketing control.

What Sprint needed was a solution to help better control messaging—ensure the delivery of the right message at the right time, across multiple channels—to ensure a unified brand experience.

Ease of Use

The Taylor Communications SMARTworks platform is tailored to accommodate various groups within Sprint. To make the system even more personalized, each user has a unique user ID and password so relevant materials can easily be accessed by multiple users in a secure environment.

Channel Optimization

The use of secure user log-ins provides detailed analysis so that Sprint can easily track which materials are being downloaded across which markets. This information provides corporate marketing with visibility into which types of communications are the most effective in different areas of the country. This allows valuable resources to spend their time on the highest value content and communications.

Targeted Messaging

Personalization options create a more targeted and relevant experience for customers and prospects through segmenting via vertical industry in addition to customizing contact information, images, headlines and logos.

Brand Control

Sprint now enjoys strong brand equity with legally approved materials that are locked into the system, while providing users consistent creative control around imagery, copy and layout. In essence, local marketing takes a global company to the local level, whether it's demographic or geographic, providing a more personalized experience for the customer.

“What we find is that we see heavy waves of activity of downloaded materials and then there's typically a subsequent spike in sales; so maybe that's just about their commitment or passion to get out there, but it is something that we are definitely able to monitor and use that as a metric.”
